

How can I find providers to support me before, during, and after menopause?

Menopause is a time in life when having strong support from your care team is so important. You want to find a team who will listen to you, take your symptoms seriously, and not gloss over how you're feeling. From navigating uncomfortable symptoms, to taking care of your mental health, to recommending pelvic floor exercises, having caring providers on your side can make the whole menopause journey feel a bit more manageable.

Here are some suggestions for finding an in-person provider, plus a guide to all of the Maven providers that you can talk to online for free anytime.

How to find an in-person menopause provider

Need a supportive medical provider who you can see for in-person visits?

Look on the North American Menopause Society (NAMS) website. There, you'll be able to search in your area for a Certified Menopause Practitioner (you might see NCMP in their title). These are providers who have been certified to provide high-quality care during the menopause years and beyond.

You can also search for a board-certified OB-GYN on the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) website.

How to find an in-person menopause provider

In addition to your in-person care team, you can find free, on-demand support on Maven throughout your menopause journey. These are some of the providers you can make a video appointment with or message on Maven anytime.

OB-GYNs

You might know them for their work with pregnancy and childbirth, but OB-GYNs are medical doctors who can support you into the menopause years.

Ask them about:

- Hormone replacement therapy
- Managing your menopause symptoms
- Irregular bleeding or other concerns you have
